Volunteering is the most effective form of organizing our society for protection against disasters.

The state possesses life-saving equipment. Citizens offer the gift of volunteering.

Volunteering is the main pillar of taking action.

With its volunteers, Cyprus Civil Defence supports other essential services and is ready to assist in cases of natural or man-made disasters.

Volunteers

- staff the Cyprus Civil Defence Stations
- participate in Search and Rescue teams
- take part in training programmes
- carry out risk prevention plans and emergency preparedness exercises

By joining the Cyprus Civil Defence Force, volunteers become participants in:

- decision taking
- risk management
- tackling of disasters that threaten us.

Cyprus Civil Defence

- Gives emphasis to the training of volunteers.

The goal is for them to better meet the growing needs of civil protection.

Volunteers are trained in:

- offering First Aid
- search and rescue
- the use of radios and other means of communication
- firefighting and water drawing
- the implementation of evacuation plans
- the development of camps and support units

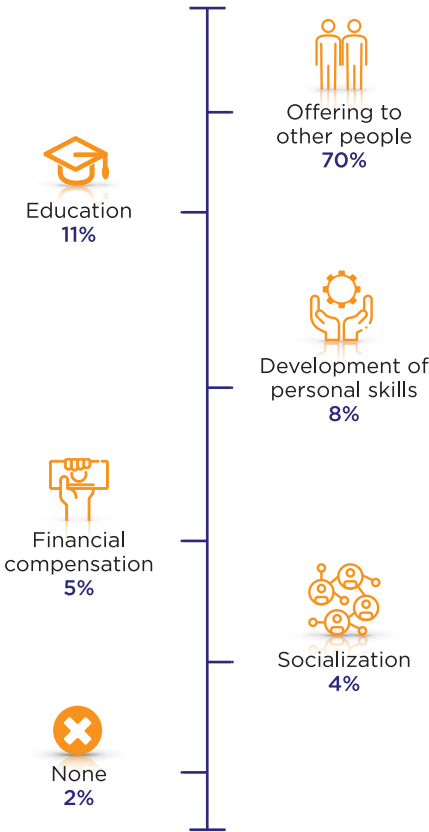

Volunteers participate in multinational and national exercises. They handle upgraded equipment and other technological means. They develop a protecting the population mentality. They acquire risk management skills.

The humanitarian nature of Civil Defence reflects on its volunteers.

Their will to offer is the strongest motivation for their participation in the Force.

What do you think would be the strongest motivation for you to become a volunteer in Cyprus Civil Defence?
